SAMPLE ANSWER • BAND 8

I • Intro (what)

I'd like to talk about an achievement I'm really proud of: finishing my first half-marathon in Tashkent last April. It was a goal I had set myself at the beginning of the year, when I couldn't even run for ten minutes without stopping.

P • When it happened

It happened on a sunny Sunday morning, three months after I had started training. I was twenty at the time and busy with exams, so finding the time was a real challenge. I began in January with a twelve-week plan, which I followed as closely as I could.

P • How I did it

To stay on track, I put the schedule on my fridge and ticked off every run. Of course, there were bad days. About halfway through I hit a wall and almost quit, but my friend told me to stick with it. The harder I trained, the more confident I became, and in the end I had put in the hours: about two hundred kilometres.

E • Reason 1

The first reason I'm proud is that it gave me a real sense of accomplishment. What I'm proudest of is that I gritted my teeth during the last two kilometres, when my legs were shaking, and I still crossed the line. I was over the moon.

E • Reason 2

On top of that, it was a huge confidence boost. Rarely do I feel so sure of myself, and after that day I found it much easier to speak up in class. A few classmates had joked that I would never finish, so it was nice to prove them wrong.

W • Wrap-up

So, all in all, my hard work paid off. My parents were waiting at the finish line, and I think I made them proud. Looking back, it was a turning point in my life, and I couldn't have done it without my friend's support.
